xerox docucolor

Xerox DocuColor represents the latest technology in on-demand digital color printing. It is designed to produce high-quality full-color printing in smaller quantities. It is most cost-effective for orders of 50 – 5000 pieces.

Printing digitally compresses the printing process by allowing digital files to go directly from the creator to the press, eliminating color separations, plate-making, press make-ready, and other prepress stages. No film. No plates. The digital printing process takes fewer steps, ensuring quality and increasing efficiency, while shifting the emphasis to customer service.

Instead of settling for black and white, or being locked into printing thousands of color pieces, you can now print just a few hundred at a time. You'll eliminate inventory costs and you'll be able to make changes continuously, ensuring that you're always sending your customers the most current information.

The Xerox DocuColor's combination of low-cost, fast turnaround time and the flexibility of digital printing make it ideal for many short-run color applications.

Short-run printing

Print runs of 5,000 or less in full color, including runs as few as ten.

On-demand printing

Ongoing print fulfillment over time that provides quick changes and fast turnaround of regularly updated, low-inventory print materials, as needed.

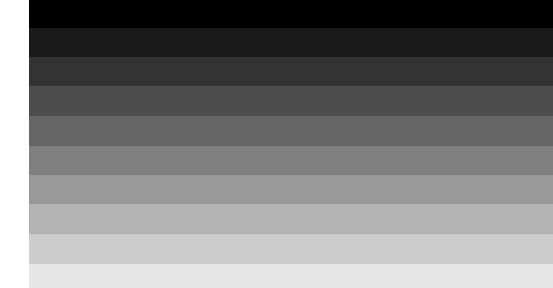

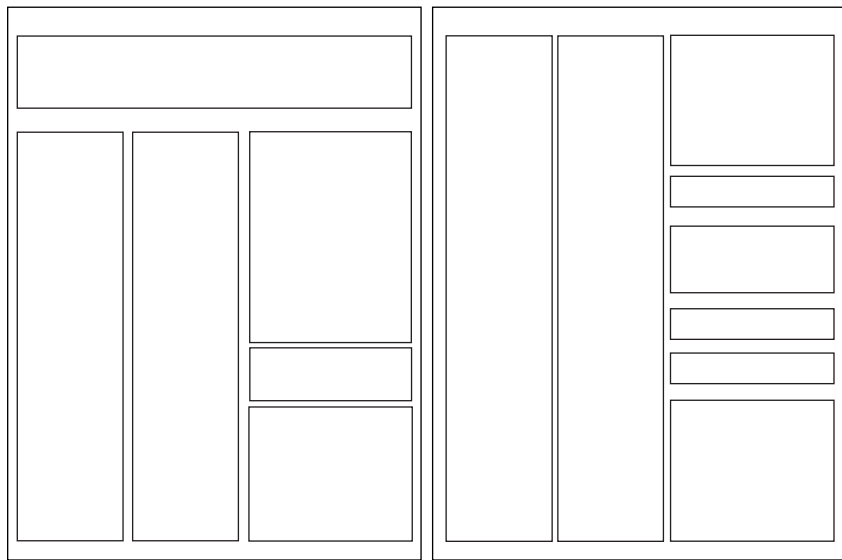

Variable-data printing

Highly customized (text and images), high-quality print pieces with a specific message targeted to a specific individual or group; also called personalization, customization, or segmentation.

Distribute-and-print

Print files distributed via networks (e.g. ISDN, the Internet) for convenient (and potentially customized) local output on digital presses. While these four areas highlight the main applications, the number of additional applications and variations on them make the range of uses for digital printing extremely broad.
